Due to the fact that Parsons is responsible for such a small portion of the total volume sent to the Clayton site, it is not in a position at this time to set a course of action independent of the PRP group. Parsons will continue to work cooperatively with the other members of the PRP group, and with the USEPA, until an agreement is established by which the group can resolve the matter to the satisfaction of the USEPA.

From an administrative, cost and logistics standpoint, the formation of a PRP Group would be very beneficial to the PRP's and to the Government. Unfortunately, the time constraints that have been imposed have proven insufficient to coalesce such a large group, and have actually been a detriment to the process. In order to resolve the problem on a more collaborative and cooperative basis, an extension of time to properly form the PRP Group and to devise an action plan is needed. It is requested that such time be afforded to the parties.

Very Truly Yours
